Course Description and Objectives

This course explores theories and research on the various ways gender both shapes and is shaped by labor-market experiences. Readings, lectures, and discussions draw upon and consider evidence from both the United States and other countries. Main topics include the following: (1) an introduction to the sociological study of gender; (2) an examination of how gender shapes educational experiences; (3) patterns of gender segregation in the labor market; (4) gender differences in authority, promotions, and pay; (5) an introduction to so-called "gendered" and "gender-neutral" theories of workplace processes and structures; (6) gender in the military and professions; (7) sexual harassment; (8) work and family; and (9) alternative work arrangements. Those topics are at the center of current research and theory on the dynamic interplay of gender and work. Overall, the course should deepen students' understanding of gender and how it both shapes--and is shaped by--workplace experiences and rewards.

Administrative Details

Course Readings, Lectures, and Review Materials. All required readings, reading review sheets, and lectures for the course have been converted to PDFs and can be downloaded or printed from the URL given at the top of this page.

Grades. Grades will be based on two in-class exams and participation. Each exam will have two distinct parts: an objective section (60 points) and an essay section (30 points). Each test is worth 90 points and the two tests together count for 180 total points. Participation is worth 20 points. The class as a whole thus has 200 possible points. Grades will be determined in the following fashion: 186-200 points = A; 180-185 points = A-; 174-179 points = B+; 166-173 = B; 160-165 = B-; 154-159 = C+; 146-153 = C; 140-145 = C-; 120-139 = D; and fewer than 120 points = F. For sociology majors, a grade of C- or less will NOT count toward major course work. Students in the Franklin College must earn a grade of "C" or better in major required course. Please read the selections in the coursepack in advance and ponder the review sheets so that you will be prepared to discuss the readings in class. Attendance matters because you cannot participate if you aren't present; good faith efforts to participate are appreciated and rewarded. Being "silent but present" will not produce a good participation grade. There are no extra credit projects.

Feedback. I welcome feedback on the course, my way of presenting material, classroom dynamics, and the like at any point. I enjoy teaching; I want this to be a good experience. If it is not, then please let me know, and I will see if there is anything I can do to enhance the quality of your experience.

Courtesy. We will be reading about and discussing a number of topics that you may find controversial. In our discussions, you will be expected to be respectful toward your classmates, even if you strongly disagree with their ideas. In this way, we will work to foster an environment in which each student feels comfortable presenting his or her thoughts, as well as critiquing or questioning the arguments presented by others. You are free to disagree with and question my views; trust that your grade does not depend upon an admiration of my every word. I'd encourage you to use evidence and logic to present your own arguments and to critique the arguments of others. In following these ground rules, I expect our discussions to be lively, interesting, and intellectually challenging.

Course Format and Schedule

Classroom sessions will involve a mix of lecture and discussion. Lectures will focus on core concepts, theories, and evidence; discussions will center on foundation readings and topical pieces of research that illustrate or elaborate ideas in the foundational readings and lectures. Please read the selections, study them using the review sheets, and come to class prepared to discuss and debate the readings. Our schedule is as follows:

Human Rights Statement

All students should know that the Department of Sociology has a Human Rights Committee for the resolution of student grievances. Any student registered for a sociology course at the University of Georgia who feels that he or she has not been treated in a fair or professional manner by an instructor is advised to follow these procedures:

- (1) The student should discuss his or her problems with the instructor of the course, unless extenuating circumstances prohibit this.
- (2) If that discussion does not resolve the grievance, the student should then discuss the problem with the Head of the Department of Sociology.
- (3) If that discussion does not resolve the grievance to the satisfaction of the student, the student may request the activation of the Human Rights Committee by submitting a letter to the Chairman of the Human Rights Committee, Department of Sociology, University of Georgia.

The Human Rights Committee will have the responsibility of investigating all charges in accordance with procedures on file in the Sociology office, copies of which are available to students. The Committee will also have the responsibility of making recommendations in writing to the Head, copies of which will be made available to the student complainant and the instructor involved. The Department Head will review the recommendations and make a decision in writing, with copies to the students complainant and the instructor or staff member involved. Any appeal of that decision must be to the Dean of the college of Arts and Sciences.
