I. Course Description

This course is an introduction to the basic concepts, theoretical approaches, and methods of sociology, with an emphasis on culture, socialization, social organizations, and society's major spheres of activity. We will consider both the structural and the cultural aspects of society-level phenomena. Besides society-level phenomena, we will look at small group processes within a society, how these reflect the larger features of society, and how they may help to perpetuate or to change those larger features.

Some Important Information:

II. Objectives

As an academic discipline, sociology's most fundamental objective is to understand societies and how they work. In keeping with that, my objective for this course is to help you to better understand societies and how they work. We must begin by recognizing that your personal experiences (and mine) reflect larger social patterns and are partly shaped by social forces lying outside ourselves. I want to encourage you to understand these larger social forces in terms of social structures, cultural patterns, the exercise of power, and the functional relationships among the various features of a society. "Thinking like a sociologist" does not come naturally to most people — we all tend to be somewhat blinded by our personal experiences and limited perspectives. Studying theories and the data that support (or fail to support) them is likely to provide us with deeper understandings than we could possibly achieve from our own personal experience and point of view alone. I hope to challenge you to think like a sociologist about the social forces that partially shape our lives and that will continue to do so in the decades ahead.

III. Class Format

I plan to lecture on class days. Because we probably will have 30 to 40 students in this class after the drop/add period is over, there are limits on how this course can be organized and conducted. Discussion sometimes is useful, particularly if it helps to show the relevance of important sociological ideas; however, this is a survey course, and a large amount of discussion would require compromises that I would prefer not to make. Historically, the introductory survey course has included material from ten to twelve research areas, which I believe are important areas for us to cover if the course is to have the value I want it to have. Teaching is subject to fads and fashions, just as almost anything else is; today the pendulum has swung in the direction of more discussion and less lecture, which requires drastically cutting the amount of material. There are pros and cons to the various possible class formats, but my preference in a survey course is to cover a greater breadth of material, and to include class discussion only when it fits in naturally (as it does from time to time).

IV. Another Disclaimer

My teaching focuses on the concepts, hypotheses, and theories set forth by the best scholars in sociology, with particular emphasis on the evidence supporting (or failing to support) those theoretical ideas. By its nature, sociology includes some materials that are politically and ideologically charged (e.g., social welfare programs, racial discrimination, same-sex marriage, and others). That makes it very important to understand that the questions sociologists ask are social scientific questions, not political or religious ones. Our goal is to describe the features of modern societies, compare some of the alternatives that exist in the world, trace the influences that produced them, and chart their likely consequences. The pursuit of these goals could be led by an instructor of any religious or political persuasion and it would make no difference, because we ask different kinds of questions and seek different kinds of answers than do the more “values-driven” areas of inquiry.

Any university is a “marketplace of ideas” and I consider that to be one of the distinctive strengths of universities. Inevitably, though, class members raise questions or offer opinions indicating a point of view on some ideologically charged subject. When this happens, it is important that we all treat those with whom we may disagree with courtesy and tolerance. That is the only way this class can work properly.

V. Exams, Grading, Attendance, and Extra Credit

There will be two regular tests (September 18 and October 28) and a final exam (Tuesday, December 16, 12:00 noon). The two regular tests and the final exam will be of the same length, will cover the same number of class days, will cover essentially the same amount of material, and will count the same toward your final grade; however, the final exam will take place during our scheduled final exam period. I do not give early exams, nor do I give late exams unless there is a very good reason. In any corporation, law office, or other workplace, people are expected to abide by a schedule. In dealing with the administrative and scheduling aspects of a course, I use the “workplace model,” which gives all of us a reasonable basis for planning ahead and does not burden the Sociology Department staff with a lot of special requests and extra work.

Summary of Important Dates:

- Test 1 — Thursday, September 18
- Test 2 — Tuesday, October 28
- Final Exam — Tuesday, December 16 (12:00 noon)

Attendance also may figure into your grade. Attendance each class day is expected and you may earn a bonus of up to 2% for perfect or nearly perfect attendance. Being in attendance means arriving on time (or very close to it) and staying in class the entire period. Zero to two days missed (out of 27 class days when attendance will be taken) will give you a 2% bonus; three or four days missed reduces this to 1%; and more than four days missed (i.e., > 15% absenteeism) eliminates any bonus. Please note that a bonus is not an entitlement. Many students will miss a day or two for religious holidays, unanticipated illnesses, or family emergencies. These are part of life and are not excused absences calling for exceptions to my policy; the leeway in the policy is analogous to that of most employment settings, and it takes account of “necessary absences.” Again, the classical workplace model is that a person gets paid their usual wage or salary if they are present (or within the leeway permitted); they forgo their usual wage or salary if they are absent (or exceed that leeway).

Except for the possible attendance bonus just described, there is no extra credit in this course. In a course at this level, every student should be asked to do the same work and should be graded by the same standards.

The Board of Regents and UGA University Council adopted a plus/minus grading system, the Fall Semester 2006 being the first time (during a regular academic year) that this system was employed. The particular variant of this system that they adopted includes no A+ and no gradations of D’s and F’s. The meanings of the 10 approved grades for purposes of calculating GPA’s have been specified by the Board of Regents. How percentage scores should translate into the 10 possible grades was left up to the professor of each course. My intention is to use the following translations, but I reserve the right to fine-tune them if unplanned circumstances of some kind make that seem desirable.

Grade	Meaning for GPA	Percentage Score
A	4.0	Score \geq 93•
A–	3.7	90 \leq Score $<$ 93•
B+	3.3	86• \leq Score $<$ 90
B	3.0	83• \leq Score $<$ 86•
B–	2.7	80 \leq Score $<$ 83•
C+	2.3	76• \leq Score $<$ 80
C	2.0	73• \leq Score $<$ 76•
C–	1.7	70 \leq Score $<$ 73•
D	1.0	60 \leq Score $<$ 70
F	0.0	Score $<$ 60

VI. Class Meetings and Assignments

With limited exceptions, our class will meet every Tuesday and Thursday throughout the Fall Semester. Our exact schedule of class days is described below. (If you are reading this on the Internet, regular class days are colored gray and test days are colored red.) If special circumstances arise and the UGA Administration cancels and/or reschedules meeting days (which occasionally happens), we will abide by such University directives. Still, the schedule below is at least 99% definite; you should note the few departures from the Tu-Th routine and put them on your calendar.

Note.— Our final exam is at 12 noon on Tuesday, Dec 16.

I tentatively plan for us to cover the following topics this semester; however, this list is an initial plan that may have to be altered somewhat, depending on the uncertainties of the semester. It is important to refer to the WebCT Assignments Page regularly to see exactly what material we will be covering and, when their respective times come, what material you are expected to have studied for each test.

- Culture and Society
- Socialization and the Self
- Deviance and Social Control
- Social Stratification
- Race and Ethnicity in Modern Societies
- Sex and Gender
- The Family and Intimate Relationships
- Religion and Modern Societies
- Urbanization
- Population and the Environment
- Collective Behavior

There will be specific reading assignments from the Schaefer textbook and from miscellaneous sources (accessible via WebCT) for each topic we cover. These assignments will be given on the WebCT Assignments Page, which also will review some of the points presented in my related lectures.

VII. WebCT Component

The University of Georgia uses a very simple system in which each member of the university community (faculty, staff, and students) has a single user name and a single password for e-mail, WebCT, and certain other purposes. If you do not regularly use your account, you must begin using it to effectively participate in this course. (My SPAM filter screens out e-mail coming from Yahoo.com and other “high risk” sources, so if you contact me from a non-UGA account, you must not assume that I will receive your message.) I expect you to log into the Sociology 1101 course materials regularly throughout the semester to make sure that you are aware of the assignments, announcements, and other items relevant to our class.

VIII. Academic Honesty

All academic work must meet the standards contained in “A Culture of Honesty.” Students are responsible for informing themselves about those standards before performing any academic work. In this course, cheating would include using unauthorized notes and/or electronic devices on tests, and/or causing attendance records to be false. Please read A Culture of Honesty: Policies and Procedures on Academic Honesty. If you do not already have this booklet, you should download it from the Vice President for Instruction’s web site and read Sections 5, 6, and 7. Violations will result in failing this course.

IX. Sociology Human Rights Statement

All students should know that the Department of Sociology has a Human Rights Committee for the resolution of student grievances. Any student registered for a sociology class at the University of Georgia who feels that he or she has not been treated in a fair or professional manner by an instructor is advised to follow these steps:

- A. The student should discuss her or his concern with the instructor of the course. Only in extenuating circumstances is this not the appropriate first step.
- B. If discussion with the instructor does not resolve the grievance, the student then should discuss her or his concern with the Head of the Department of Sociology.
- C. If discussion with the Department Head not resolve the grievance to the student’s satisfaction, he or she then may request activation of the Human Rights Committee. This is done by sending a request in writing to: Chair, Human Rights Committee, Department of Sociology, University of Georgia, Campus.

When requested to do so, the Human Rights Committee has the responsibility to investigate all charges in accordance with procedures on file in the Department of Sociology Main Office, copies of which are available to students. The committee will make recommendations in writing to the Department Head, with copies going to the student and instructor involved. The Department Head will review the recommendations and make a decision in writing, with copies distributed to the student and instructor. Any further appeal must be made to the Dean of the Franklin College of Arts and Sciences, and should be accompanied by copies of all previous materials.

Grievances involving a grade, whether during the semester or after the semester is over, are subject to policies of the Franklin College of Arts and Sciences and the University of Georgia. These are available on UGA web pages and from the appropriate offices in New College and Old College (campus buildings just north of the Main Library).
